Biographical Sketch

Lee Lawrence was born July 25 1923, in Atlanta, GA. Her father was a traveling salesman and moved the family often. She grew up in Los Angeles, Nashville, Louisville, New Haven, Buffalo, and Cleveland. At the age of seven, she was already in "show business." Inspired by the circus and the remnants of vaudeville at the Hippodrome Theatre, she began producing "two penny" musical extravaganzas for neighbors' children and their parents.

At the age of twenty, she became technical consultant to the great stage designer Norman Bell Geddes on the biggest show to be produced during the war, Billy Rose's "Seven Lively Arts." Rose asked Lee to supervise the reconstruction and restoration of the Ziegfeld Theatre where the show was to open and later to be the coordinator of the spectacular, which had her working with stars such as Beatrice Lillie and Bert Lahr, with composer Cole Porter, and writers Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman, and musicians Ben Hecht and Benny Goodman.

She continued to work on Broadway in the production area, finally forming her own production company with her future husband, Bert Lawrence. After their marriage, he went to work for J. Walter Thompson and she stayed home to raise two children, working part time at their nursery school as a librarian.

After her divorce from Bert Lawrence in 1956, she went back to work, joining NBC-TV as assistant to the producer of Hallmark Hall of Fame. She began working for Dave Garroway on "Wide, Wide World," and followed him to the Today show, where she was news and feature editor, working closely with Garroway developing stories, setting up interviews, producing special segments including an award winning show on mental health, and a week of live shows from Rome, Italy, in 1958.

In 1961, Lawrence suffered a catastrophic accident involving a fall. Two vertebrae in the small of her back were crushed, three of her ribs were broken, and her pelvis was shattered. The sole of her left foot was split and her right foot was shattered. Her most serious injury involved her left hip where her upper leg bone had been driven through the top of her hip socket. Her doctors thought Lawrence might die from shock and her injuries. Her medical history states that Lawrence remained in a coma for about six months, receiving intravenous feeding and around the clock blood transfusions. After six months, the doctors felt she would live. She was transferred to the Hospital for Joint Diseases, but doctors did not think she would ever walk again. In the end her right leg was amputated below the knee and she was fitted with a prosthesis.

After months of physical therapy, she began to walk again. Finally she was ready to move forward with her life and she moved to Washington, D. C. to bring her skills to a second career in government.

In 1964, she entered the federal service as a public information specialist in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. She developed and implemented public awareness campaigns for various programs, arranged media interviews of key persons, and wrote news releases, brochures, manuals, newsletters and speeches. She produced several series of public announcements for national television and radio distribution as well as documentary films and television specials. Between 1965 and 1983, Lawrence designed and coordinated White House and interdepartmental conferences and annual meetings, including the White House Conference on Aging, 1971 and 1981; the International Year of Disabled Persons in 1982; and conferences on air pollution, dental health, occupational health, gerontology, and trauma.

After working with various federal agencies for several years, in 1976 Lawrence received the assignment to conduct the public awareness program for the White House Conference on Handicapped Individuals.

In October 1982, Lawrence took a disability retirement from the federal service but continued to earn her living by doing freelance work from her home office. From 1985 to 1987 she served as outreach coordinator for two television special programs. She wrote a documentary called "The Skin Horse," that dealt with the issue of sexuality and people with disabilities and wrote and produced another documentary, "Drinking and Driving, The Toll, The Tears," calling attention to the lenient treatment of intoxicated drivers who cause accidents. From her home office in Bethesda, Maryland, Lawrence operated an information program for the National Organization on Disability in Washington D.C. and wrote articles for disability publications including Ability Magazine.

Lawrence continued to face and conquer physical challenges. In 1992, it was discovered that she had a massive brain tumor that was removed in a four-hour operation. She returned home from the hospital in less than a week. In 2000, she was operated on successfully to remove cancer of the lung. That same year she had triple heart by-pass surgery. While she rebounded from both procedures, by the end of the year it was clear she could no longer live independently, and she moved into the Potomac Valley Nursing and Wellness Center. While living here she wrote for the center's newsletter and buoyed the spirits of other residents with stories of her life in the theatre and television.

She died August 26, 2002, with her son at her side. Friends recalled her with love and affection, including Carlton E. Spitzer, who said, "Despite her pain, Lee Lawrence Ansberry has given constant encouragement, comfort, and inspiration to her friends these many years."

Scope and Content Note

This collection is arranged in nine series: Subject Files; Manuscripts and Published Writings; Reference Files on Programs and Agencies; Reference Files on Illness and Disease; Reference Files on Disability; Reference Files on Accessibility; White House Conferences Materials; Printed Materials; and Audio Visual Materials.

Series I, Subject Files, consists of correspondence and other personal files relating to Lawrence's interests and friends. Of note is a file containing biographical materials such as resumes and letters of recommendation. Two files document the work of her friend Hugh Gallagher, the nationally-known disability rights activist and scholar. Included is a transcript of an interview by Lawrence with Gallagher regarding the design of his accessible home. Also of note is a copy of a letter from Dave Garroway commenting on Lawrence's work on the "Today" show. The file on the White House Conference on Handicapped Individuals includes the annual report on the event written by Lawrence in 1978, and a photograph from the conference of Lawrence and First Lady Rosalyn Carter. The series also includes correspondence with her friends and acquaintances like Carlton Spitzer and Sandra Fisher, and a personally inscribed copy of a book on John McConnell, father of Earth Day, dated 1994.

Series II, Manuscripts and Published Writings, consists of drafts of many of Lawrence's public relations writings, production scripts, and some published materials. Many of these manuscripts focus on disability-related topics. The series also includes scripts Lawrence wrote for television and radio programs. A few of her published works are included in the series, including an article on James Brady, articles on older Americans she wrote for Senior Advocate, and an article that appeared in the Easter Seal Society newsletter on the subject of accessibility.

Series III, Reference Files on Programs and Agencies, contains material that Lawrence collected in the course of her duties operating an information clearing house for the National Organization on Disability. She collected information about programs and agencies that covered topics such as aging, animals helping the disabled, children, the Foster Grandparents Program, Manpower Training, the March of Dimes, the Older American Volunteer Program, and Roosevelt Warm Springs Symposium. The material includes brochures, pamphlets, newsletters, and conference material.

Series IV, Reference Files on Illness and Disease, is a continuation of Lawrence's information files and includes material on alcohol, Alzheimer's Disease, breast cancer, deafness, epilepsy, kidney disease, mental illness and retardation, multiple sclerosis, polio, stroke and Tourette's Syndrome. There include brochures, information packets, fact sheets and booklets about various illnesses and diseases.

Series V, Reference Files on Disability, contains information about the American Amputee Foundation, the Americans with Disabilities Act, College Students with Disabilities, Disability Civil Rights, newsletters, voting information, population, sexuality, and developmental disabilities. The series includes several issues of Disabled USA magazine, and much informational material about the Americans with Disabilities Act. There is information about employing disabled people, rehabilitation material, transportation for the disabled, a rehabilitation directory, and Guidelines for Reading and Writing About Disabled People.

Series VI, Reference Files on Accessibility, includes accessibility information for aircraft boarding chairs, conferences, church buildings, housing, and parking and van regulations. It includes wheelchair community resources, wheelchair athletics, and a travel guide for the handicapped.

Series VII, White House Conferences on Handicapped Individuals and the White House Conference on Aging Materials, consists of published materials prepared for these conferences. Includes volumes one and two of the 1981 White House Conference on Aging proceedings and handbook for the conference. Also included are several delegate workbooks for the 1977 White House Conference on Handicapped Individuals.

Series VIII, Printed Materials, ranges from issues of Ability Magazine, 1983-1986, to a book titled What to Do About Your Brain Damaged Child. The series contains newsletters, pamphlets, periodicals, and newspaper and magazine clippings arranged by topic or title .

Series IX, Audio Visual Materials, is divided into three subseries by format. Subseries I, Slide Shows, include scripts, audiocassettes, and slides for programs produced by Lee Lawrence. Subseries II, Audio and Video Tapes, include audio cassettes Lawrence used in her productions and video tapes of disability programs and a commercial featuring Lawrence. Subseries III consists of films produced by Lawrence.
